FRANK H. ROSE, Agent.

Copyright, 1889.

"LITTLE BO PEEP
has lost her sheep and couldn't tell where to find them." So the old nursery rhyme says, and it seems to us that her case is alone and they'll always be—and bring—tails behind them." All this may be true of lost sheep, but if you have lost your health you cannot afford to leave that alone. It will not come back of its own accord. Some people brag that they never bother about colds. They "let them go the way they came." Alas! too often the victims go to a consumptive's grave. Until very recently a cure for Consumption, which is universally acknowledged to be scrofula affecting the lungs, would have been looked upon as miraculous, but now people are beginning to realize that the disease is not incurable. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery will cure it if taken in time and given a fair trial. This world-renowned remedy will not make new lungs, but it will restore diseased ones to a healthy state when other means have failed. Thousands gratefully testify to this. It is the most potent tonic, or strength restorer, alterative, or blood-cleanser, and nutritive, or flesh builder known to medical science. For Lingering Coughs, Weak Lungs, Spitting of Blood, "Liver Complaint" and Dyspepsia or Indigestion, it is an unequaled remedy.

DR. SAGE'S CATARRH REMEDY cures the worst cases, no matter of how long standing. 50 cents, by druggists.

CHAPTER VIII.

A PRICE ON HIS HEAD.

No sprinter ever made better time than did Mr. Drane in his first run from the Retreat. A medal at the end of a track is not half the inducement to speed that a pursuer at the beginning is. If Lawrence had been timed by a stop-watch it would probably have appeared that he had broken all records at the end of the first hundred yards; and yet it seemed to him that he was not running half fast enough. The streets was absolutely deserted, but he came presently to the corner of an avenue that was brilliantly lighted and lively with many passers.

Then he stopped abruptly and walked slowly up the avenue for a short distance. His heart was beating violently with excitement and the exertion of his run, and he knew that he must get somewhere out of sight at once. Just ahead of him he saw that the street-car tracks entered a tunnel, the sidewalks and carriage-way rising over a hill above it. Believing that here lay his opportunity he entered the tunnel and walked through its half mile of length without molestation save from cars that passed him occasionally. The drivers and conductors looked at him sharply, and that made him wish that he had stood above ground. It also impressed him with the necessity of disguising himself.

At the end of the tunnel he found himself in front of the Grand Central Depot. If he could only take a train and go somewhere! Instinctively his hand went to his pocket and then he remembered. The thought of passing again through an experience of hunger with the possibilities of police courts and prison-cells appalled him. Rather than be had half a mind to return to Jenkins and confess himself a lunatic. Then suddenly he would be put in a straight jacket and be confined in a padded cell for the rest of his days. Horrible.

Suddenly he remembered that he had been in the habit of carrying a fifty-dollar bill in a little pocket-arrangement made at the waistband of his trousers. Most of us would have thought of that before, but Mr. Drane had passed his boyhood in the days of paper money and his manhood had not started from the leading-string until the beginning of the unhappy epoch in which the world is without war. No matter, the fact seemed to encourage him to enter into consideration of practical problems. In the first place he felt certain that his clothes, thin though they were, would have been looked upon as a disguise, and the proprietor of the Retreat supplemented that inducement by an offer of fifty dollars from his own purse. Then followed a minute description of the missing man.

Lawrence felt flattered, but still not happy.

"Every man but the millionaires in the city is looking for me," he thought, and he glanced cautiously over his paper at the other occupants of the car. THE search for the bodies of the entombed Dunbar miners has been abandoned. The effort to rescue the men has been prosecuted unremittingly, but there remains no possibility that any of the unfortunate victims are alive.

AT the Republican State Convention last week Senator L. A. Watres, of Lackawanna county, received the nomination for Lieutenant Governor. Thomas J. Stewart, the present incumbent of the office, was nominated by acclamation for Secretary of Internal Affairs, and W. H. Andrews was re-elected Chairman of the State Committee.

SOME time ago the Philadelphia Press asked Delamater to answer the charges preferred against him by Senator Emery. But Delamater, Quay fashion, has treated the request with "dignified silence." The ballots will fall in "dignified silence" next November, and Mr. Delamater will have an opportunity to remain at home and practice "silence and fun; or dignified silence."

AN organization to be called the Independent Party has been started by the farmers of Dakota, one of the principles of which is that our tariff laws should be so changed as to reduce the present rate, taxing luxuries the highest, putting on the free list all articles of prime necessity and raw materials which enter into manufactures, raising only sufficient revenue for the needs of economic government.

IN referring to the Quay Delamater platform at Harrisburg the Philadelphia Press says: "It is a document to be proud of." We should say so; and when a paper like the Press, which supports and swallows everything Leland Stanford, Quay & Co. fails to endorse it, it is indeed time for honest sincere Republicans to denounce the rotten methods by which party success is to retain its power in Republican States in Pennsylvania.

AS to whether or not the consumer pays the tariff, listen to the farm Senator Plumb, Republican: "When pure taxes When the manufacturer of iron comes to the Senate and says, I am [illegible] I do not get a protection of a certain duty is imposed what is he saying. He is simply saying, If you give me a certain duty you put in my power to charge over that duty as an additional tax on the farmers of the United States. If the consumer does not pay the tariff, who does?"

DURING the campaign of 1888 George W. Roberts, of Waterbury, Conn., declared that any one who would vote the Democratic ticket was a thief. Now Mr. Roberts is in jail upon the charge of stealing $30,000 from a concern for which he was bookkeeper. There is a bit of poetic justice in the fate of Mr. Roberts, and generally it is the case with all those who think like him. There may be a little difference in politics, but human nature is alike in both parties. It is too true that honest men are in politics for its [illegible] rewards.

THE McKinley tariff law tax on tin will be 41.84 per cent. The [illegible] imposed by the McKinley bill will be [illegible] per cent. It will be [illegible] per cent. FOR LOVE'S SWEET SAKE.

A wild, wild night, the wind blowing a hurricane, the sea rising in its fury below the cliffs, and Diane Leigh, with her face pressed close against the window-pane, shuddered as the thunder rent the air and the lightning's vivid flash showed the white-capped waves lapping the top of the rocks in their wrath.

"I cannot stay here," she cried at last. "I must go down to the beach. I may be no help, but I can be no hinderance."

She lifted a heavy scarf as she spoke, but, as she wrapped it around her, another flash of lightning illumined the heavens, and she saw her father and brother coming toward the cottage, bearing the senseless form of a man between them.

It is one of the visitors that was at the hall last year, Diane, and most likely this year too," her brother said; "the one Miss Vernon is to be married to—Ralston St. Clair. Another row-boat went to pieces on the rocks—one man rescued out of that party as well, and they are bringing him here, I think. It is the nearest place."

At a distance Diane Leigh had seen Ralston St. Clair before, without more than a passing thought; but as she glanced at his Greek-god face, pallid now in what might be death, a strange thrill passed through her heart—a forerunner, perhaps, of the love that was to be her doom—a foreshadowing of the bitter pain fate doomed that love to be to her.

Three hours later, Ralston's handsome eyes opened to rest on—to him at least—the loveliest face earth ever held—a proud, dark face, with slumberous eyes of deepest brown; a low, broad brow, over which the nut-brown hair clustered in tiny rings; a skin like olive satin, with a pomegranate bloom on the rounded cheeks and curving lips.

"Am I dreaming?" he murmured, closing his eyes again; then, after a moment's silence: "I remember now," he said. "The yacht struck on the cliffs, the storm overwhelmed us so suddenly. My God! it was terrible! Are—are the others——"

"Hush!" Diane said. "Thank God you are saved yourself. They—they are at rest."

Yes, his life was saved, his and the stranger's, over whom her father and brother were still bending.

The next day the stranger had fully recovered; but Ralston had been dashed on the rocks, and almost two weeks elapsed before he was out of danger.

The stranger, Frank Denver, had taken up his abode at the cottage.

"I am only a wanderer," he said, "and I am willing to pay my way. I like this place. Let me stay till the roving notion comes on me again."

And to this James Leigh had agreed.

Two weeks is not very long, but it was long enough for Diane Leigh's passionate young heart to learn the bitter-sweet lesson of love—love for Ralston St. Clair, the promised husband of Elaine Vernon.

How the truth of her own madness and folly came to her Diane could never tell; only the words of Elizabeth Barret Browning's poem seemed to ring in her ears:

"How do I love thee? Let me count the ways.
I love thee to the depth, and breadth, and height
My soul can reach.
I love thee to the level of every day's most quiet need.
I love thee purely, as they turn from praise.
I love thee with the breath, smiles, tears
Of all my life; and if—God chooses—I shall
But love thee better after death."

The day of his departure drew near, and a few days before it Elaine Vernon came down to the cottage.

Ralston was out of danger, though his arm was still in a sling, his handsome face still wearing the pallor of his illness.

He and Diane were down on the beach when the carriage containing Miss Vernon drove up. There was a [illegible] in the girl's face as she [illegible] and [illegible] a stalwart fisherman, [illegible] What was all earth to him to [illegible]

"What should I do?" [illegible]ly, "what could he do but keep his troth to his promised wife?"

He knew it could be [illegible]er, and yet [illegible] conquered him.

"I cannot do it, Diane," he cried, "oh, my love, my beautiful love, I cannot give you up!"

"You cannot give up what you never possessed," she said, with a faint smile; "and, Ralston, you know I am dearer to you than all else on earth, as it is to me; and—and we [illegible] on [illegible] paths life far asunder."

Her voice was low and faint, but clear, and he knew she meant it.

Their parting lay for ever.

Without a word he drew her toward him and pressed his lips to hers in one long, passionate caress, and she did not say him nay.

"As we kiss the dead, Diane," he said. And then: "Good-by, sweet-heart, good-by!"

And Diane Leigh was alone on the beach, the murmuring waters at her feet seemed to repeat the bitter-bitter-sweet farewell.

"Good-by, sweet heart, good-by."

Three weeks later she stood at the death-bed of the man whom all her life she had believed her father, and there heard a tale that blanched her beautiful face with the temptation it offered her.

Out under the starlight she fought again the battle with her heart.

The temptation before her was bitterly strong.

She could go to the man she loved and tell him all. He would not lose his birth-right, and she—oh, could she give him up—could she throw wealth and love away together for the sake of Ralston St. Clair's honor?

"Your honor is dearer to me than life," she had said to him. Come weal or woe Elaine Vernon should be his wife.

"For love's sweet sake I will be silent," she cried, "my hand will never hold the tantalus cup to my darling's lips. I will drain it myself in silence."

And so the story told her on James Leigh's death-bed was the secret of her own heart.

So Elaine Vernon's wedding-day drew near, and Diane's beautiful face grew strangely pale, her proud, dark eyes heavy with hushed tears.

"I cannot bear it," she cried, standing on the lonely beach, and stretching out her hands to the blue waters meeting the horizon. "Oh, my love, my love, how having known you, can life ever be the same to me again and you and I apart?"

The wedding day dawned clear and bright, but standing at the window of her dressing-room, a faint presentiment of coming evil fell over Elaine Vernon.

She pushed back the soft gold waves of her hair that fell around her, and turning from the window walked slowly up and down the room.

"What has come over me?" she murmured; "is there any harm in taking the goods the gods send me? I was only a child then, and—ah, heaven, I must have been mad—and yet I loved him."

"Inconsistence, thy name is woman!" for as the words left her lips Elaine Vernon sank down on her knees, her slender form shaken with sobs, the memory of a dream long dead and gone conquering her for the moment.

"Why not welcome the goods the gods send me?" she repeated. "Had he lived I would have gone back to him, for I loved him; but when the temptation came, I thought it best to let the dead past bury its dead and be silent."

Three hours later she stood before the altar to pledge her faith to Ralston St. Clair—Ralston St. Clair, whose strange pallor could not pass unnoticed, and more than one present remarked it, and yet she was fair as a poet's dream, this girl he was to wed, in her robes of shimmering satin, the costly veil shading the pearl-fair face, cerulean eyes, and glistening hair.

"You take this man to be your wedded husband——"

Slowly and impressively the solemn words rose and fell, and then:

"The lady can scarcely do that, as I claim that relationship to her already."

And Frank Denver stepped to the girl's side, his eyes resting full on her face, compelling her to meet their glance.

One glance. It was enough. She stretched out her hands with a low cry.

"Frank, oh, Frank, I believed you dead!"

And then she lay white and senseless at his feet.

Two hours later Ralston St. Clair stood at Diane Leigh's side, holding her hands in his and looking with passionate, loving eyes down on her lovely face.

"Love, sweet love," he said, "fate has been kind to me for it has given me you, for I lose all—all—for I certainly cannot marry Elaine Vernon, for she is the wife of another."

Then Diane raised her lovely eyes——

"You can marry Clara Vernon's [illegible] fill the terms of the will. Listen! If [illegible] Janet Leigh's home [illegible] on condition that—— had lost her sheep and couldn't tell where to find them." So the old nursery rhyme says, and it sets one to thinking of those who, "leaves were alone and they'll come home and bring their tails behind them." All this may be true of lost sheep, but if you have lost your health you cannot afford to leave that alone. It will not come back of its own accord. Some people brag that they never bother about colds. They "let them go the way they came." Alas! too often the victims go to a consumptive's grave. Until very recently a cure for consumption, which is universally acknowledged to be scrofula affecting the lungs, would have been looked upon as miraculous, but now people are beginning to realize that the disease is not incurable. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery will cure it if taken in time and given a fair trial. This world-renowned remedy will not make new lungs, but it will restore diseased ones to a healthy state when other means have failed. Thousands gratefully testify to this. It is the most potent tonic, or strength restorer, alterative, or blood-cleanser, and nutritive, or flesh builder known to medical science. For Lingering Coughs, Weak Lungs, Spitting of Blood, Liver Complaint and Dyspepsia or Indigestion, it is an unequaled remedy.

DR. SAGE'S CATARRH REMEDY cures the worst cases, no matter of how long standing. 50 cents, by druggists.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

1. Subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary are considered as wishing to renew their subscriptions.

2. If subscribers order the discontinuance of their periodicals, the publisher may continue to send them until all arrearages are paid.

3. If subscribers neglect or refuse to take their periodicals from the post-office to which they are directed, they are responsible until they have settled their bills and ordered them discontinued.

4. If subscribers remove to other places without informing the publishers, and the papers are sent to the former address, they are held responsible.

5. The courts have decided that refusing to take periodicals from the office or removing and leaving them uncalled for, is prima facie evidence of intentional fraud.

6. If subscribers pay in advance they are bound to give notice at the end of the time if they do not wish to continue taking it; otherwise the publisher is authorized to send it and the subscriber will be responsible until an express notice, with payment of all arrearages, is sent to the publisher.

THE search for the bodies of the entombed Dunbar miners has been abandoned. The effort to rescue the men has been prosecuted unremittingly, but there remains no possibility that any of the unfortunate victims are alive.

AT the Republican State Convention last week Senator L. A. Watres, of Lackawanna county, received the nomination for Lieutenant Governor. Thomas J. Stewart, the present incumbent of the office, was nominated by acclamation for Secretary of Internal Affairs, and W. H. Andrews was re-elected Chairman of the State Committee.

SOME time ago the Philadelphia Press asked Delamater to answer the charges preferred against him by Senator Emery. But Delamater, Quay fashion, has treated the request with "dignified silence." The ballots will fall in "dignified silence" next November, and Mr. Delamater will have an opportunity to remain at home and practice "silence and fun; or dignified silence."

AN organization to be called the Independent Party has been started by the farmers of Dakota, one of the principles of which is that our tariff laws should be so changed as to reduce the present rate, taxing luxuries the highest, putting on the free list all articles of prime necessity and raw materials which enter into manufactures, raising only sufficient revenue for the needs of economic government.

IN referring to the Quay Delamater platform at Harrisburg the Philadelphia Press says: "It is a document to be proud of." We should say so; and when a paper like the Press, which supports and swallows everything Leland Stanford, Quay & Co. fails to endorse it, it is indeed time for honest sincere Republicans to denounce the rotten methods by which party success is to retain its power in Republican States in Pennsylvania.

AS to whether or not the consumer pays the tariff, listen to the farm Senator Plumb, Republican: "When pure taxes When the manufacturer of iron comes to the Senate and says, I am [illegible] I do not get a protection of a certain duty is imposed what is he saying. He is simply saying, If you give me a certain duty you put in my power to charge over that duty as an additional tax on the farmers of the United States. If the consumer does not pay the tariff, who does?"

DURING the campaign of 1888 George W. Roberts, of Waterbury, Conn., declared that any one who would vote the Democratic ticket was a thief. Now Mr. Roberts is in jail upon the charge of stealing $30,000 from a concern for which he was bookkeeper. There is a bit of poetic justice in the fate of Mr. Roberts, and generally it is the case with all those who think like him. There may be a little difference in politics, but human nature is alike in both parties. It is too true that honest men are in politics for its [illegible] rewards.

FOR LOVE'S SWEET SAKE.

A wild, wild night, the wind blowing a hurricane, the sea rising in its fury below the cliffs, and Diane Leigh, with her face pressed close against the window-pane, shuddered as the thunder rent the air and the lightning's vivid flash showed the white-capped waves lapping the top of the rocks in their wrath.

"I cannot stay here," she cried at last. "I must go down to the beach. I may be no help, but I can be no hinderance."

She lifted a heavy scarf as she spoke, but, as she wrapped it around her, another flash of lightning illumined the heavens, and she saw her father and brother coming toward the cottage, bearing the senseless form of a man between them.

"It is one of the visitors that was at the ball last year, Diane, and most likely this year too," her brother said; "the one Miss Vernon is to marry—Ralston St. Clair. Another row-boat went to pieces on the rocks—one man rescued out of that party as well, and they are bringing him here, I think. It is the nearest place."

At a distance Diane Leigh had seen Ralston St. Clair before, without more than a passing thought; but as she glanced at his Greek-god face, pallid now in what might be death, a strange thrill passed through her heart—a forerunner, perhaps, of the love that was to be her doom—a foreshadowing of the bitter pain fate doomed that love to be to her.

Three hours later, Ralston's handsome eyes opened to rest on—to him at least—the loveliest face earth ever held, a proud, dark face, with slumberous eyes of deepest brown; a low, broad brow; over which the nut-brown hair clustered in tiny rings; a skin like olive satin, with a pomegranate bloom on the rounded cheeks and curving lips.

"Am I dreaming?" he murmured, closing his eyes again; then, after a moment's silence; "I remember now," he said. "The yacht struck on the cliffs, the storm overwhelmed us so suddenly. My God! it was terrible! Are—are the others——"

"Hush!" Diane said. "Thank God you are saved yourself. They—they are at rest."

Yes, his life was saved, his and the stranger's, over whom her father and brother were still bending.

The next day the stranger had fully recovered; but Ralston had been dashed on the rocks, and almost two weeks elapsed before he was out of danger.

The stranger, Frank Denver, had taken up his abode at the cottage.

"I am only a wanderer," he said, "and I am willing to pay my way. I like this place. Let me stay till the roving notion comes on me again."

And to this James Leigh had agreed.

Two weeks is not very long, but it was long enough for Diane Leigh's passionate young heart to learn the bitter-sweet lesson of love—love for Ralston St. Clair, the promised husband of Elaine Vernon.

How the truth of her own madness and folly came to her Diane could never tell; only the words of Elizabeth Barret Browning's poem seemed to ring in her ears:

"How do I love thee? Let me count the ways.
I love thee to the depth, and breadth, and height
My soul can reach.
I love thee freely as men strive for right.
I love thee purely, as they turn from praise.
I love thee with the breath, smiles, tears
Of all my life, and if—God choose—I shall
But love thee better after death."

The day of his departure drew near, and a few days before it Elaine Vernon came down to the cottage.

Ralston was out of danger, though his arm was still in splints, his handsome face still wearing the pallor of his illness.

He and Diane were down on the beach when Elaine arrived. [illegible]

[illegible] Vernon [illegible] Diane's arm.

"I have [illegible] you," she said, smiling, [illegible] and [illegible] name I have been deprived of all my life.

I cannot deny your claim, Clark Vernon said. I am not sorry the truth has come out, though I was too cowardly to acknowledge it myself. You are my daughter, Diane—your mother was my wife.

Down on the beach the same evening Ralston drew Diane within his arm.

Why did you not plight your troth right before me?" he said. "Why were you silent so long, sweetheart?"

"For love's sweet sake," she whispered low.

"And you have spoken now?" he said, with a smile, as he drew her closer to him.

"For love's sweet sake," she answered. Family Story Paper.
